Our Mental Model

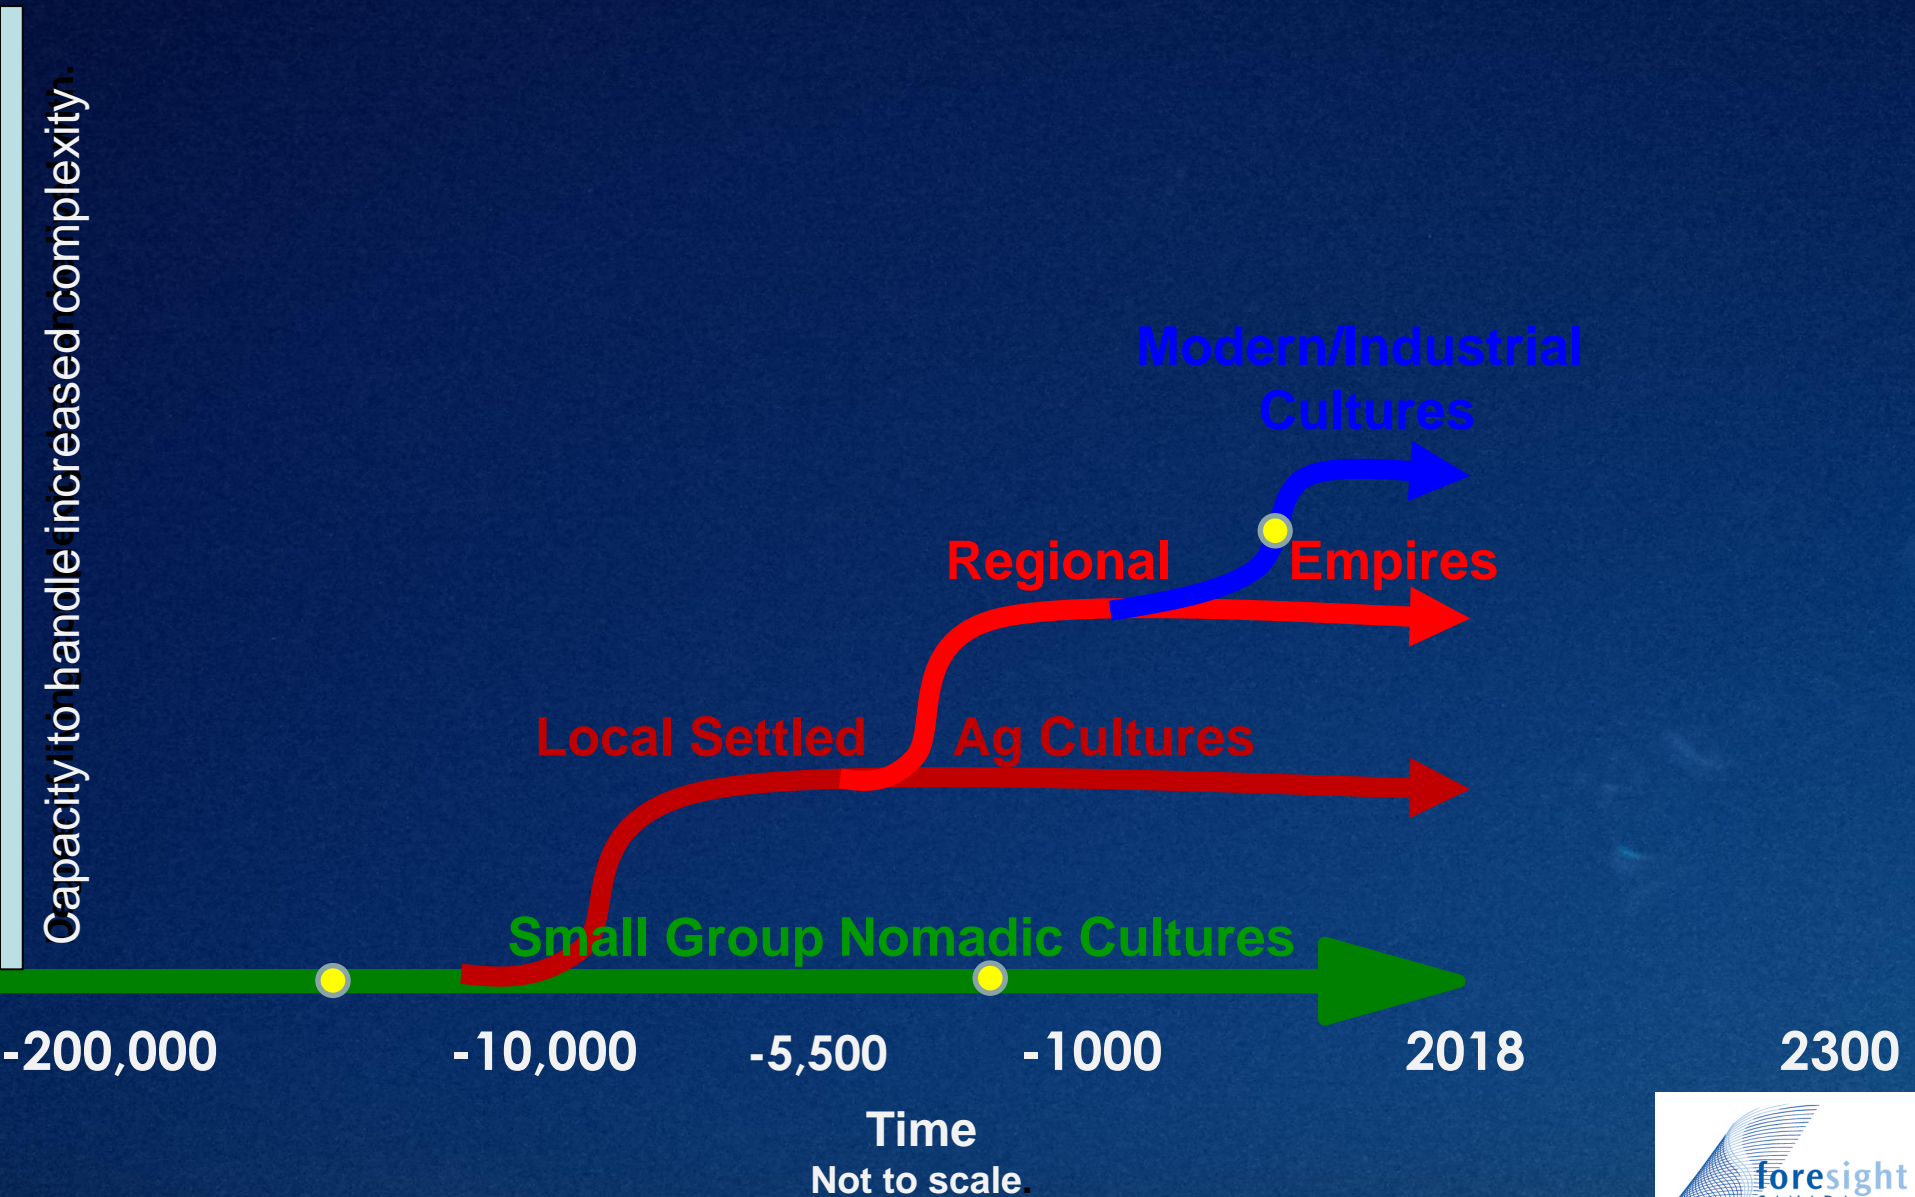

When a new Form of Civilization emerges the result is a:

Personal-to-civilizational scale trajectory/paradigm change.

I Fear We are Missing

1. The reality that ours is a time of personal-to-civilizational scale trajectory change; that the core work of the 21st Century is not to sustain what we have/are, but to learn to see this new dynamic and cooperate/evolve with it.
2. The developed capacities – personal-to-societal – required to recognize, explore, understand and cooperate with this transition, e.g. the conceptual clarity, institutional commitments and a critical mass of leaders in every sector...

What Do I Fear?

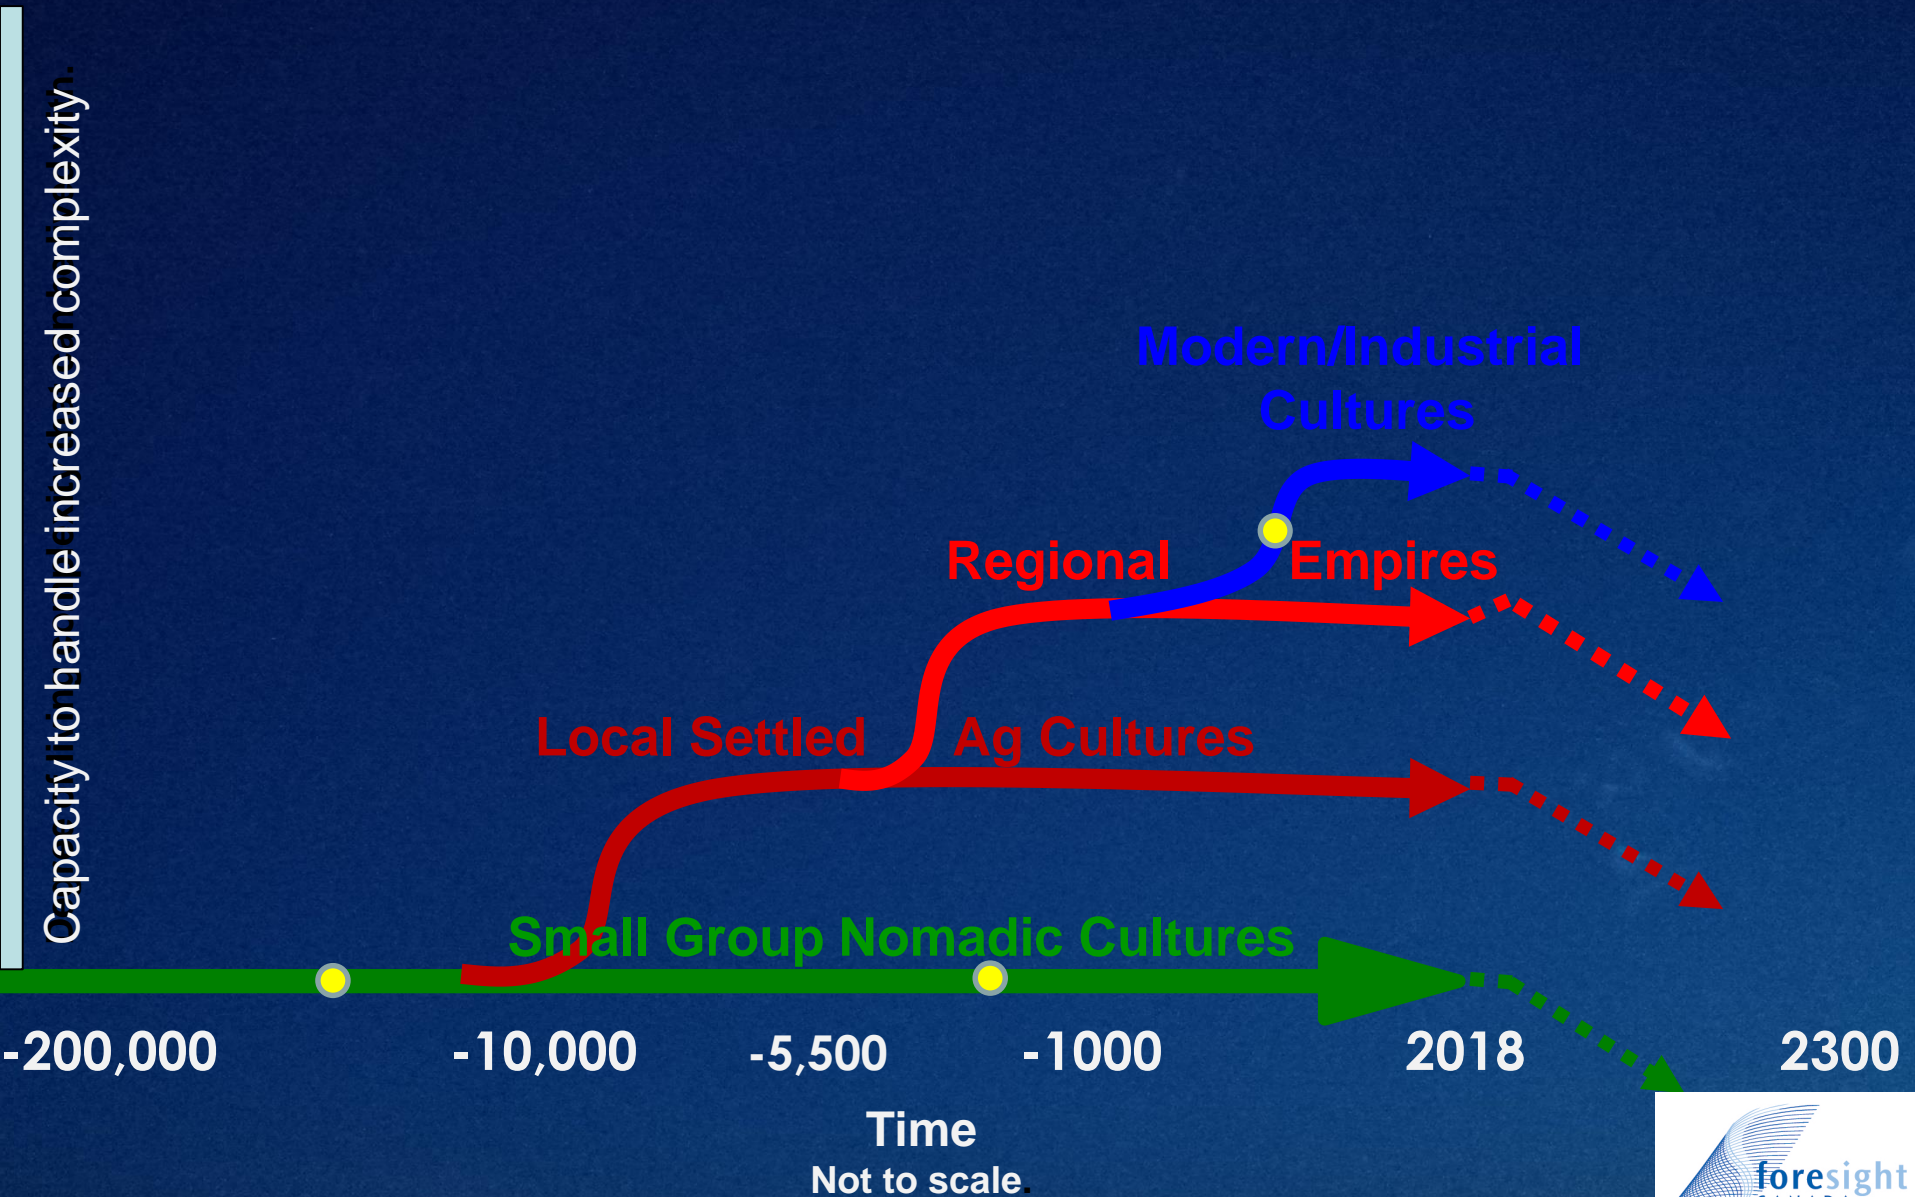

We are (largely) Culture Trapped

For understandable reasons, overwhelmingly, we Moderns recognize, read and construe the data of our situation from within the framework of our Modern/Industrial form of civilization.

Our stance, inside and out, as “Moderns” blinds us to the need for and the nature and reality of personal-to-civilizational trajectory change.

We are into “Adelaide's Lament”.

Futures Now Programmed In?

That Are We Missing?

A new form of civilization is required and emerging. Its emergence needs to be:

- Seen, understood, co-operated with.
- Rapidly by any historical standard.
- Intentionally – consciously.
- Scalable, in time, to the whole globe.
- Seen as required, NOT as an option.
- Wise, integral and meta-reflexive.

Three Good Books

A wide-angle photograph of a snowy landscape. In the background, several snow-capped mountains rise against a clear blue sky. The foreground is a flat, snow-covered field with some dark rocks scattered across it. On the right side, there is a tall, dark stone structure made of stacked rocks, possibly a cairn or a small monument.
